Rivals Aladdin's Cave.

Ephraim Baker, one of the oldest residents of Kansas, and for a quarter of a century a citizen of Topeka, reports a story which surpasses the fables of ancient and stories of modern wealth. When Cleopatra won fame by dissolving a pearl for Marc Antony to drink she little thought that a few centuries later a plain western miner and prospector would gather from the shores of an antediluvian river such countless numbers of these gems as to rival the stories in Aladdin's cave, and make the wealth of Croesus and Monte Cristo pale to insignificance. He lives in a comfortable home in Topeka during the winter, and as soon as spring breaks, dons a rough suit, and with a prospector's outfit moves out across the plains toward the sunset, to be seen no more until the snow flies. Monday Mr. Baker displayed to a few friends a bottle filled with pearls of various colors, shapes and sizes. Some are pure white, others a delicate shade of green, some have a tint of blue, and others are of the rarest variety of all—black. The forms are perfectly round, oblong, elliptical, etc. They vary from the size of a pin head to that of a hazel nut. The most astonishing part of Mr. Baker's story, however, relates to the quantity of these gems, which almost surpassed belief. He says he found them on the western slopes of what was once a great river or sea rolling over the plains of Kansas. As the foothills of the Rocky mountains extend down to Ellsworth and Belleville in Kansas, a rough guess at the location of these ancient pearl fields would be just beyond the Smoky Hill and the Arkansas valleys. Somewhere in that treeless region Mr. Baker says there is 100 miles of old river bed whose sands are literally filled with pearls. Turn up a spadeful of soil where you will, and there rolls from it a stream of tiny globules which would enrich the collection of the Shah of Persia. Whether Mr. Baker will ever conclude to reveal the site of the "valley of pearls" he does not now know, but he will visit it again this spring.—Chicago Tribune.

MEDICINAL.

A VETERAN.

I was wounded in the leg at the battle of Stone River, Dec. 31, 1862. My blood was poisoned from the effects of the wound, and the leg swelled to double its natural size, and remained so for many years. The poison extended to my whole system, and I suffered a thousand deaths. Nothing did me any good until I took Swift's Specific, which took the poison out of my system, and enabled me to feel myself a man again. S. S. S. is the remedy for blood poison.
